

Abstract

A method for determining authorization to use software components of a computer system or a controller using a unique hardware identification code is disclosed. An identification number is generated by an encoding algorithm from a hardware identification code and license information, optionally including additional information. Comparison of 5 encoded and decoded identification numbers will permit or restrict access to the software components.